Investing in Clean Water

Snohomish County is home to spectacular marine shorelines, lakes, rivers, and streams that provide recreation, wildlife habitat, food, and natural beauty unique to the Pacific Northwest. Maintaining healthy septic systems is critical for clean water and to protect our aquatic ecosystems, the health and safety of county residents, and the value of your home.

Approximately 75% of Snohomish County's 80,000 septic systems are 25 years old or older, and many are near bodies of water. By maintaining a clean and healthy septic system, you are helping keep pollution out of the environment and investing in clean water for your family and your community.

About Savvy Septic

This Snohomish County program is a partnership with the Washington State Department of Ecology and PSCCU. Together, we're keeping our water clean by helping Snohomish County residents become Savvy Septic owners.
